GENERAL REMARKS REGARDING THE COLLECTION.

Indian Relics.

BOTH in America and in Europe, within more recent years, a deep interest has been taken in the relics and antiquities of the American Indians, Mound-Builders and Cliff-Dwellers. Indeed, these mementoes of the Red Races of America possess an interest and value, equalled by few, or no other antiquities. This spirit of study and research has led to the existence of many collections, both public and private. Not only are there great museums devoted to the collecting and preservation of Indian relics, but there are many state, county, and other public collections.

Besides all these, historical and archaeological societies are springing up, making a specialty of collecting Indian relics. Colleges, seminaries, and schools see the historical and educational value of a collection of these Aboriginal implements for the instruction of students. The wealthy and cultured, and the lover of things antique, are now having "Indian corners" in home, office, or studio. Yet still more numerous than all of these combined, perhaps, are the private collections of individuals.

The manufacture and use of these utensils, implements, weapons and ornaments of the Red Man is now almost, if not altogether, a thing of the past. The Caucasian world is bidding for the old handiwork of a vanquished race. The United States Government for years has been energetically collecting specimens of the Indian's handicraft for preservation in the great National Museum and Smithsonian Institution, at Washington, and other large museums, both in America and Europe, have been doing the same. Hence, a great scarcity of these relics now prevails in the relic market, and, in the nature of things, the scarcity will become greater as the years go by.

Tribute to the Vanquished.

We, as a race, have pushed the Red Man from his home, and the graves of his ancestors; we have supplanted him in the possession of his former hunting-ground, until to-day the white man's agriculture, commerce, architecture and transportation roads have largely changed even the natural face of much of the country, and its primitive owners have gone, never again to return. Then should the memory of this people not only command the sympathy of Americans, but should we not carefully preserve the remaining handiwork of the Red Man as one of the last tributes we can pay him?

The various utensils, implements and ornaments of stone, flint, clay, steatite, hematite, slate, etc., scattered more or less throughout the United States, form silent but pathetic testimonies to the ingenuity and skill of the prehistoric people who once inhabited the country; while the bows and arrows, baskets, pottery, beaded tanned skin ornaments, bags, etc.; the pipes, tomahawks, etc., etc., of the more modern tribes are potent witnesses to the taste and artistic skill of the American Indians.

My Early Interest in the Indians.

From early boyhood the Indians and their implements have had a deep and peculiar interest for me. Ten times, from 1871 to 1902, did I cross the American Continent by various routes between the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans, British America and Mexico, besides making ten additional journeys into the Indian country between the Missouri River and the Pacific coast. During this period, 1871 to 1902, I visited more than fifty different tribes, embracing every tribe of importance within the territory of the United States, as well as tribes in British America.

My object in traveling among them in their native wilds and living among them, almost as one of their number, eating with them around their lodge and camp-fires, sleeping upon their wigwam couches, sometimes with the shrill whoop of the war-dance near by, sounding in my ears, was that I might not only satisfy a desire that seemed to be a part of my very being from childhood, but that I might thereby become enabled to hand down to this and future generations, through the medium of the printed page, a plain, concise description of the life and character of these children of nature, in the domestic circle of the lodge, around the camp-fire, on the march, in the chase, in battle, massacre, capture and peace; giving in detail an account of the customs, habits, appearance, dress, language, traditions, beliefs, implements, ornaments, antiquities, etc., of these peculiar and interesting branches of the human family, now so fast hastening into the grave of oblivion, as well as to procure photographs of their persons, scenes in their life, and a mammoth collection of their various utensils, implements, weapons, ornaments, etc.

Purchasing Relics from the Indians.

On these journeys I secured a varied and valuable collection of their implements and antiquities, traveling thousands of miles over prairie and tablelands, through vast forests and deep canyons, across rugged bluffs and lofty mountains, over desert wastes and through delightful valleys. Leaving the borders of civilization with a team, camping outfit, weapons, photographic material and one companion, sometimes a white man, acting as driver and cook, and sometimes an Indian acting in the same capacity, but generally, especially in the earlier days, going alone, and sometimes on foot, I made these wilderness journeys.

The purchases I made among the Indians on these trips were finally, from time to time, conveyed safely to some border settlement, and from there, as opportunity offered, shipped home to Pennsylvania. I have traveled for months and months, summer after summer, among the Indians in their native wilds, camping right in their villages, and buying what the warriors and squaws would bring to me. Of course, the bulk of these relics were modern, yet many ancient and prehistoric specimens were also secured. The Indians soon learned that I wanted ancient pottery, stone mortars, pestles, axes, club-heads, flint arrow-heads, etc., and they made it an effort to procure them for me.

In New Mexico, Arizona and other sections where ancient ruins, unexplored by white men at that time, still existed, to say nothing of the soil never turned by the plow-share, these ancient relics were then more abundant than they now are. As to what use I could possibly make of such old wares and trinkets, was a mystery to the Indians, and I was often an object of peculiar looks and smiles. But so long as they could get a valuable return for some old implement or trinket that had probably lain idle and discarded for centuries, they were interested.

Much of my stock, both ancient and modern, can never be duplicated, only as collectors may be willing to sell, or as heirs may dispose of them after the death of the owners. Many of the modern relics are very old, having been long in use by the Indians. The time, care and labor expended, to say nothing of the many thousands and thousands of miles traveled, the money invested, and the hardships and privations endured, as well as the danger often faced, few people in this generation can understand; yet, if these relics—mute witnesses of the Red Man's being and skill—shall be preserved and valued as historical mementoes by this and future generations, after the Red Men who made them, and the white man who spent many of the best years of his life in gathering them, shall be mingled with the dust of mother earth, his efforts will not have been in vain.

Exploring Cliff-Dwellings and Mounds.

I personally explored the ruins of the ancient Cliff-Dwellers in various sections of the Southwest, and procured pottery and stone relics, conveying over the mountains, across deserts, and through deep, rugged canyons, on the backs of horses and mules and by team, mortars, axes, pottery, etc. The mounds of the Mississippi Valley and the South were also visited, and from them were procured mementoes of the ancient people who had made them. Every State and Territory in the Union has been my roaming ground, as well as portions of Canada, the British northwest and Mexico.

These journeys to the Indian country, however, will now cease, the trip of 1902 being the last I shall ever make. The day for obtaining old and used relics from the Indians is now about, if not altogether, past, moreover, many of my old acquaintances among the Red Men have gone to the spirit world, and the accumulating "snows" have made me less able to bear the fatigue and privation of wilderness travel than when I was a younger man. Therefore, I will not likely ever again see the North American Indian in his picturesque village, or sit with him around the cheerful fire of his cozy lodge, nor wander among the mounds and Cliff-dwellings of vanquished races.

Other Modes of Procuring Relics.

In addition to the ancient relics personally secured from prehistoric ruins or gathered from other localities, or purchased from the Indians, are also relics secured from other persons, such as Indian traders, collectors, dealers, and other persons.

Nations and Tribes Represented.

Of prehistoric relics the manufacture of the ancient Mound Builders, Cliff-Dwellers, and the Aztecs, are represented by my collections. Of modern Indian relics, the handicraft of the following tribes are represented:

Acomas,	Arickarees,	Blackfeet,	Chippewas,
Ahowsetts,	Assiniboins,		Chocklolsats,
Albernies,	Bannocks,	Cayuses,	Clayoquots,
Apaches,	Bella Bellas,	Chehalis,	Cowichans,
Arapahoos,	Bella Coolas,	Cheyennes,	Cochities,

Comanches,	Kilsimats,	Mowilsits,	Sacs,
Creeks,	Kiowas,		San Ildefonsoes,
Crees,	Kitimats,	Nahwittis,	San Juanes,
Crows,	Kitkatlahs,	Nambes,	Santa Claras,
	Klamaths,	Nanaimoes,	Santa Domingoes,
Delawares,	Klaskimoes,	Navajoes,	Sechelts,
Diggers,	Klikatats,	Nez Perces,	Shastas,
	Klinkets,	Nit Nats,	Shoshones,
Eskimoes,	Klowitas,	Nootkas,	Sioux,
Eucleulets,	Kootenais,	Nutlematlas,	Stonies,
	Koskimoes,
Flatheads,	Kyoquoits,	Omahas,	Taos,
Foxes,		Ottawas,	Tenactus,
Frazer Rivers,	Lagunas,		Tesuque,
			Thompson Rivers,
Gros Ventres,	Machelets,	Pawnees,	Tooquots,
	Makahs,	Penobscots,	Tsimshians,
Haidas,	Mandans,	Picuris,	Tuscaroras,
Hamatsas,	Maricopas,	Pimas,
Hesquoits,	Massetts,	Pitt Rivers,	Ucluclets,
Hetsikets,	Metlakatlahs,	Piutes,	Umatillas,
Hih Elicits,	Mexican Indians,	Pomoes,	Utes,
Hoopas,	Mockstocies,
	Modocs,	Quastumes,	Walla Wallas,
Isletas,	Mojaves,	Quatsinoes,	Washoes,
Jemez,	Mokies,	Quiniaults,	Wichitas.

The Modern Indian Relics.

Many of the modern Indian relics I purchased direct from the Indians while in their camps and villages, between the years 1871 to 1902. Those that I did not personally buy from the Aborigines came to me through the hands of Indian traders, interpreters and other persons in the Indian country. Many of these relics I personally procured from the Red Men while living and traveling among them in early days. For instance, I secured many specimens while among various tribes between the years 1872 to 1878, from Indians who were then among the wild and hostile tribes, and in the days of their warfare and buffalo hunting.

Such relics cannot be duplicated to-day by purchase from the present Indians, as the young and civilized Indians neither make nor use them. The old people have died, and with their departure has passed out of use the implements, utensils, weapons, garb, ornaments, etc., they made and used. The rapid march of emigration, the scarcity of game, and the great pressure brought to bear upon the young generation of Indians by the Government, for their civilization, has changed Indian customs and stopped the making and using of former Indian implements, utensils, weapons, garb, ornaments, etc. The old men and women have gone to "the happy hunting ground," and their children, whom the Government compelled to attend school, speak the white man's language, adopt the white man's garb, ways and mode of life, and cannot make the implements, utensils, weapons, ornaments and garb that were made and used by their parents and grandparents, nor do the young and civilized Indians of the day use such things or have them.

A Difference.

The value placed upon the Indian relics in the collection herein catalogued, may be considered higher than the value usually placed upon curios, trinkets, souvenirs, etc., made by the civilized Indians and half-breeds of to-day, and sold by curio and bric-a-brac dealers at summer and winter resorts and other places frequented by tourists. However, the experienced dealer, as well as the advanced collector, archaeologist, ethnologist and antiquarian understands and appreciates the difference between a mere tinsel curio made to sell by young, civilized Indians or half-breeds, and the old and used Indian garments, weapons, utensils, implements, ornaments, etc., made and used many years ago by the old, and now departed Indians in the days of their more primitive mode of life, and procured from them in their camps and villages in years gone by, when it meant much hardship, privation and danger for a solitary white man to live and travel among them, trading for their wares as I did in the days of their buffalo hunting and warfare.

Indian relics are not a commodity that the dealer can secure a stock of at will. The more he sells, the less he will have to sell, and each specimen sold raises the value of those remaining. Indian relics, both ancient and modern, are fast being gathered into museums and scientific institutions. It is not likely that any of them will ever emerge therefrom as a commodity that can be purchased, hence, the dealer has little prospect of ever replacing the relics he sells, unless he is so fortunate as to find occasionally, a collector who is willing to part with his treasures, or heirs who want to sell the collection of a deceased friend.

Of course the Aborigines who made the stone and other ancient relics have been dead for many centuries, and the most of the modern Indians, if not all of them, who made the modern relics, are now in their grave, or already gone to dust, so that a continuation of the supply of Indian relics is impossible.

One day, in 1874, I entered a large village of Ponca Indians, on the Missouri River, near the mouth of Ponca Creek, in northern Nebraska, while the warriors moved about armed and on the lookout for their enemies, the Sioux, and the first night I spent with them I witnessed, until nearly midnight, the wild, half-naked and hideously-painted warriors perform the scalp dance around a pole to which they had fastened the gory hands and scalps of the Sioux whom they had killed near by some days before; the weird scene of the scalp dance being lit up by the glare of a blazing fire, and the occasion honored by a grand feast of dog's meat.

In early days I sometimes entered Indian villages at considerable risk, and was occasionally rudely received, until a better acquaintance and the nature of my business among them became known. In 1872 I entered a village of Pawnees on the Platte River, in Western Nebraska, and a group of armed and painted warriors menacingly surrounded me, and began to search my pockets. Becoming rather uneasy, I resisted their conduct and made an effort to leave, when they tried to disarm me. Here an aged warrior came upon the scene and to my relief, and I followed him to another part of the village, after which I was free from molestation. In 1873, while approaching a large village of Sioux Indians, near the mouth of Cheyenne River, South Dakota, I met a similar experience. Sometime after that, during the same year, the Arickaree Indians, near the mouth of Heart River, North Dakota, approached me with firebrands. Later on, during the summer or fall of 1873, the Chippewas, in the then forest wilds of Northern Minnesota, attacked me with stones as I approached their camp. Yet in every instance I finally left the camps and villages in safety with the relics I had procured.

While living among the Sioux, almost as one of them, in 1878, I went to sleep often with the shrill sounds of the warhoop sounding in my ears, as it was uttered by warriors engaged in the revelry of the wild dances being performed near by. The relics made and used in that day have now an historical and antique value compared with which the curios and trinkets made by the civilized Indians and half-breeds of recent times, and sold by curio and bric-a-brac dealers to tourists, are mere toys, with little or no value as the handicraft of a vanished race.

Some Explanations.

This collection of Indian relics is a carefully gleaned representation of the various utensils, weapons, implements, ornaments, garb, etc., of the American Aborigines. It embraces nearly all of the typical specimens of the handicraft of the Mound Builders, Cliff-Dwellers and the modern Indians.

Whether the material used in the spear and arrow heads, drills, scrapers, knives and other chipped or flaked implements was flint, chert, hornstone, obsidian, chalcedony, agate, or some other siliceous stone, it is here, for convenience, given the usual name of "flint."

Of the large stone implements, whether the material be granite, sandstone, quartz, or other stone, it is here, for convenience mentioned as "stone," unless in cases where it seemed well to describe more definitely. Steatite, hematite, and slate are not generally herein called "stone."

Beads of glass, porcelain, etc., are for convenience herein called by the general name of "glass."

Leggins, shirts, dresses, moccasins, bags, etc., which were usually made of deer, mountain sheep, moose, elk and other skins, are for convenience, here mentioned as "tanned skin." All of these different animal skins when tanned soft, thin and pliable by the Indian method, were very similar in appearance, and, when tanned with the hair off, passed in general, more or less, by the term, "buckskin," though strictly speaking, the name "buckskin" would apply only to the skin of the male deer.

When specimens are referred to as "quilled" or "decorated with quills" it is meant that the quills are those of the porcupine dyed in bright colors, and often worked in designs and figures. When specimens are referred to as "beaded," it is usually meant that the beads of various bright colors, are worked in figures and designs.

Moccasins, leggins, etc., and all things in pairs, are herein counted as but one specimen. No difference how many feathers and other things are in a head-dress, no difference how many beads or pieces of wampum, are on a string, it is counted herein as but one specimen. No difference how many arrows are with a bow, they are counted herein as but one specimen. The same is true of all specimens; no difference how many things entered into its makeup, all are herein reckoned as but one specimen. This plan has been carried out whenever it seemed practicable, hence the actual number of specimens, if counted separately, would be very much larger than the total given in this catalogue. For instance, strings of wampum upon which are over four hundred different pieces, are herein counted as but one specimen.

Each specimen bears a number corresponding to the number herein given.
